FROM THE EDITOR

By ANGEL CHAVEZ

Be Patriotic! LOVE YOURSELF, LOVE YOUR NEIGHBOR, LOVE YOUR COMMUNITY, LOVE YOUR COUNTRY!

We have the raw materials, the ability, and the responsibility of expressing God's love.

Walking in God's divine love and walking in the spirit is not to be postponed to the future any longer.
There is so much need of it here on earth.

AS CHRISTIANS, WE MUST LEARN TO EXPRESS IT, WE ARE FULL OF IT. GOD'S LOVE IS THE CORE OF OUR NEW BEING IN CHRIST JESUS, BECAUSE:
GOD IS LOVE! AND LOVE
NEVER FAILS... WHY?

"...because the love of God has been poured out in our hearts by the Holy Spirit who was given to us."

Romans 5:5

GOD'S LOVE IS TO BE OUR DAILY OUTFIT, WE MUST LEARN IT, EXPRESS
IT AND DECLARE IT TO THIS GENERATION. ONLY GOD'S
KIND OF LOVE WILL PIERCE
ALL DIMENSIONS OF LIFE.

"But above all these things put on love, which is the bond of perfection." Colossians 3:14

"...who also declared to us your love in the Spirit." Colossians 1:8

Real love is spiritual, out of another dimension, God's dimension. It is expressed from His dimension, in the Spirit and by the Spirit, through our spirit to affect all dimensions, to fill all our needs in this generation and all generations.

LOVE NEVER FAILS AND,
IN A CHRISTIAN LIFE, GOD'S LOVE MANIFESTS AND EXPRESSES ITSELF LIKE THIS:

IN CHRIST JESUS I AM: I am
patient and long suffered, I am kind,
I am not jealous or envious, I am not puffed up or arrogant, I do not behave rudely, I am not selfish, I am not angerly, I do not think evil, I do not rejoice in iniquity, I do rejoice in the truth, I bear all things, I believe all things, I hope all things,

I endure all things, I do not fail,
ever...IN JESUS.

1 Corinthians 12:4-8

Mankind opposes God's nature because it is acting under the failing Adamic nature. But in Christ Jesus we are a new creation of love with a resurrected love nature:

"17 Therefore, if anyone is in Christ, he is a new creation; old things have passed away; behold, all things have become new. 18 Now all things are of God,..."

2 Corinthians 5:17

IN CHRIST JESUS OUR LOVE
IS TO BE EXPRESSED IN ALL
AND TO ALL.

"For in Him we live and move and have our being, as also some of your own poets have said, 'For we are also His offspring.'" Acts 17:28

LOVING SELF, WITH GOD'S
KIND OF LOVE IS IMPERATIVE, IN ORDER TO BE ABLE TO LOVE OUR NEIGHBOR AND EVEN OUR ENEMY.

"If you really fulfill the royal law according to the Scripture,
'You shall love your neighbor as yourself,' you do well;..."

James 2:8

LET'S MAKE A PURPOSE
IN OUR HEARTS TO LOVE
OURSELVES GOD'S WAY, THEN
LOVING OUR NEIGHBOR
AND OUR ENEMY COULD BE NATURAL.

Keep Your Kids Active This Summer!

The end of the school year can cause a panic in parents. It doesn't matter if you're working full time or at home with the kids, the fears are the same: you don't want your children to spend their summer in front of the TV all day or texting as their only means of communication with the rest of the world.

Kids need to stay active and occupied during the summer months to make sure they get the most out of their summer before heading back to school.

Research gathered over a 100-year period indicates students score lower on standardized tests when they take the exams at the end of the summer months rather than at the start of the summer, according to the National Summer Learning Association.

Parents can keep their kids' minds stimulated by trying any one these activities:

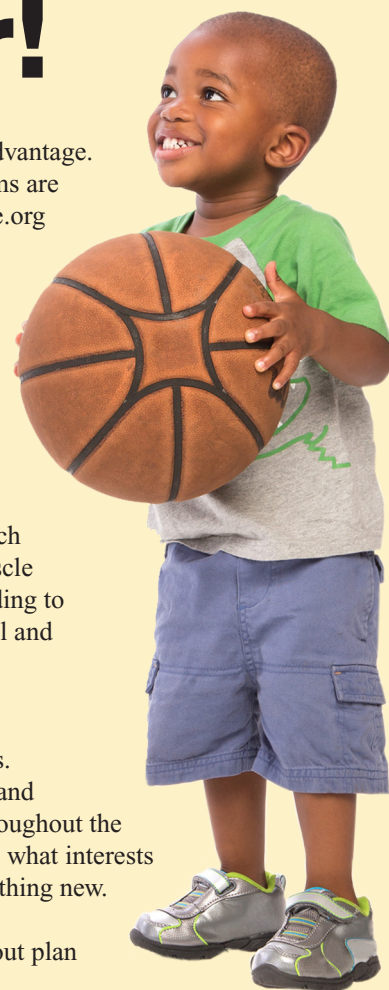

1. Ask teachers for summer packets that can help children practice what they learned throughout the year.
2. Make reading a daily habit. Children learn when their brain is active, even if they're reading fun and easy books.
3. Enroll children in a summer enrichment program. Schools or community programs often sponsor events and activities to keep kids engaged.

4. Use the television to your advantage. Make sure educational programs are part of their routine. Slackware.org lists possible channel options like National Geographic, Animal Planet and Discovery Channel.

Focus on Physical

Make sure your child's summer is filled with physical activities. Children need 60 minutes of physical activity each day, including aerobic and muscle strengthening activities, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

5. Sign your child up for local recreational or sports programs. Churches, community centers and schools usually host events throughout the summer. Let your child choose what interests them. They may even try something new.
6. Do Zumba or another workout plan together every day.

FIREWORKS SAFETY

Holidays like Independence Day (celebrated on July fourth) along with other celebrations can be fun times with great memories. But make sure everyone knows about fireworks safety. Although I run the Sheriff's Office and not Fire Rescue, my deputies are typically the first on the scene when someone is injured. Sadly, children are many times the subject of the call. So what can you do in Okeechobee County to have fun but do so safely?

Ask Yourself, What Are the Dangers of Fireworks?

If not handled properly, fireworks can cause burns and eye injuries in kids and adults. The best way to protect your family is not to use fireworks at home. Attend public fireworks displays, and leave the lighting to the professionals.

Lighting fireworks at home isn't even legal in many areas, so if you still want to use them, check with your local police department first.

Fireworks Safety Tips

Fireworks are legal in Florida so keep these safety tips in mind:

- Kids should never play with fireworks. Things like firecrackers, rockets, and sparklers are just too dangerous. If you give kids sparklers, make sure they keep them outside and away from the face, clothing, and hair. Sparklers can reach 1,800°F (982°C) — hot enough to melt gold.
- Buy only legal fireworks (legal fireworks have a label with the manufacturer's name and directions; illegal ones are unlabeled), and store them in a cool, dry place.
- Illegal fireworks usually go by M-80, M100, blockbuster, or quarterpounder. These explosives were banned in 1966 but still account for many fireworks injuries.

Monkeypox: An unfamiliar virus spreading fast

Here we are, well into year three of the COVID-19 pandemic, and now we're having an outbreak of monkeypox? Is this a new virus? How worried should we be? While new information will continue to come in, here are answers to several common questions.

What is monkeypox?

Monkeypox is an infection caused by a virus in the same family as smallpox. It causes a similar (though usually less severe) illness and is most common in central and western Africa. It was first discovered in research monkeys more than half a century ago. Certain squirrels and rats found in Africa are among other animals that harbor this virus.

Currently, an outbreak is spreading fast outside of Africa. The virus has been reported in at least a dozen countries, including the US, Canada, Israel, and in Europe. As of this writing, Reuters reports more than 100 confirmed or suspected cases, making this the largest known outbreak outside of Africa. So far, no deaths have been reported.

Naturally, news about an unfamiliar virus spreading quickly internationally reminds us of the start of the COVID-19 pandemic. But monkeypox is not new — it was first discovered in 1958 — and several features make it likely to be far less dangerous.

What are the symptoms of monkeypox?

The early symptoms of monkeypox are flulike, and include

- fever
- fatigue
- headache
- enlarged lymph nodes

The rash that appears a few days later is unique. It often starts on the face and then appears on the palms, arms, legs, and other parts of the body. Some recent cases began with a rash on the genitals. Over a week or two, the rash changes from small, flat spots to tiny blisters (vesicles) similar to chickenpox, and then to larger, pus-filled blisters. These can take several weeks to scab over. Once that happens, the person is no longer contagious.

Although the disease is usually mild, complications can include pneumonia, vision loss due to eye infection, and sepsis, a life-threatening infection.

How does a person get monkeypox?

Typically, this illness occurs in people who have had contact with infected animals. It may follow a bite or scratch, or consuming undercooked animal meat.

The virus can spread between people in three ways:

- inhaling respiratory droplets
- directly touching an infected person
- less often, through indirect contact such as handling an infected person's clothing.

The respiratory route involves large droplets that don't linger in the air or travel far. As a result, person-to-person spread typically requires prolonged, intimate contact.

Is monkeypox a sexually transmitted illness?

Monkeypox is not considered a sexually transmitted illness (STI) because it can be spread through any physical contact, not just through sexual contact. Some of the recent cases have occurred among men who have sex with men. That pattern hasn't been reported before.

Can monkeypox be treated?

Yes. Although there are no specific, FDA-approved treatments for monkeypox, several antiviral medicines may be effective. Examples are cidofovir, brincidofovir, and tecovirimat.

Can monkeypox be prevented?

Vaccination can help prevent this illness:

- Smallpox vaccination, which was routine in the US until the 1970s, may be up to 85% effective against monkeypox.. The US government has stockpiled doses of smallpox vaccine that could be used in the event of a widespread outbreak.
- Additionally, the FDA approved a vaccine (called JYNNEOS) in 2019 for people over 18 who are at high risk for smallpox or monkeypox. The makers of this vaccine are ramping up production as this outbreak unfolds.

If you are caring for someone who has monkeypox, taking these steps may help protect you from the virus: wear a mask and gloves; regularly wash your hands; and practice physical distancing when possible. Ideally, a caregiver should be previously vaccinated against smallpox.

How sick are most people who get monkeypox?

Monkeypox is usually a mild illness that gets better on its own over a number of weeks.

Researchers have found that the West African strain of monkeypox is responsible for the current outbreak. That's good news, because the death rate from this strain is much lower than the Congo Basin strain (about 1% to 3% versus 10%). More severe illness may occur in children, pregnant people, or people with immune suppression.

What else is unusual about this outbreak?

Many of those who are sick have not traveled to or from places where this virus is usually found, and have had no known contact with infected animals. In addition, there seems to be more person-to-person spread than in past outbreaks.

Is there any good news about monkeypox?

Yes. Monkeypox usually is contagious after symptoms begin, which can help limit its spread. One reason COVID-19 spread so rapidly was that people could spread it before they knew they had it.

Outbreaks occur sporadically, and tend to be relatively small because the virus does not spread easily between people. The last US outbreak was in 2003; according to the CDC, nearly 50 people in the Midwest became ill after contact with pet prairie dogs that had been boarded near animals imported from Ghana.

Perhaps the best news is this: unlike SARS-CoV2, the virus that causes COVID-19, monkeypox is unlikely to cause a pandemic. It doesn't spread as easily, and by the time a person is contagious they usually know they're sick.

How worried should we be?

The growing numbers of cases in multiple countries suggest community spread is underway. More cases will probably be detected in the coming days and weeks.

It's still early in the outbreak and there are many unanswered questions, including:

Has the monkeypox virus mutated to allow easier spread? Early research is reassuring.

- Who is most at risk?
- Will illness be more severe than in past outbreaks?
- Will existing antiviral drugs and vaccines be effective against this virus?
- What measures can we take to contain this outbreak?

So, monkeypox is no joke and researchers are hard at work to answer these questions. Stay tuned as we learn more. And let your doctor know if you have an unexplained rash or other symptoms of monkeypox, especially if you have traveled to places where cases are now being reported. ♦

HEALTH CHALLENGES FACING OUR VETERANS AND SERVICE MEMBERS

Three Ways Your Diet May Be Affecting How You Feel

What if your diet is keeping you from getting better? Most of us are pretty comfortable with the idea that what we eat affects our weight and long-term health, but a growing body of research shows that food can have a much more immediate impact on how we feel. Just like professional athletes and bodybuilders use specific diets to build muscle and maintain their performance, you can relieve – or aggravate – aspects of your health through food. That includes people struggling with their mental health or recovering from certain brain injuries.

In this issue, we're going to talk about three common health challenges we see Veterans and Service Members struggle with and how the right foods can help you achieve better outcomes. While this is far from an exhaustive resource on the subject, we hope this serves as a great jumping-off point for you to start making positive changes.

Editor's Note: While we've based this article on numerous academic studies and well-established science, we are not health or nutritional experts. We always recommend making healthy lifestyle changes while consulting with your healthcare provider to manage your physical and mental health best.

Brain Injuries and Mental Health

Your brain is just like any other organ or muscle in your body; it needs calories and nutrients to function well. When it doesn't get enough of the right fuels, it can start impeding your normal brain functions and keep it from healing naturally from injuries, such as a concussion. For those struggling with depression or just having a hard time enjoying everyday life, you may also be suffering from low levels of serotonin and dopamine, two natural chemicals that help you feel more relaxed and happy. In addition to many healthy foods stimulating the production of both, research by Harvard Health suggests 90% of our serotonin receptors are in our gut.

So what should you be eating to build a healthier, happier brain? Just like every other aspect of your body, your mental health will benefit from a balanced diet full of vitamins, nutrients, and plenty of water. More specifically, your brain benefits from foods that are high in protein or contain omega-3 fatty acids. Your brain breaks down protein to heal itself and stabilize your blood sugar levels, which has been shown to improve anxiety and depression.

What Can I Eat for Brain Health?

- Fish
- Olive Oil
- Nuts and seeds (such as almonds and pumpkin seeds)
- Veggies like broccoli, spinach, and tomatoes
- Fruits like Blueberries and apples

Frequent Headaches and Migraines

If you find yourself experiencing headaches or migraines several times a week, your diet might have something to do with it. While stress and lack of sleep can also be frequent culprits, 20% of people suffering from either have food sensitivities. In basic terms, these are specific ingredients or food preparations that your body doesn't like. The problem is, there are a lot of common food sensitivities, here are just a few to prove the point:

- Alcoholic beverages
- Pickled foods
- Potato chips and other processed foods
- Coffee and other caffeinated drinks
- Dairy
- Wheat

Research has found over 30 commonly reported trigger foods, with many being common, basic ingredients. So how on earth are you supposed to figure out which ones (if any) are causing you pain? There are two common approaches.

The first option, which is the least disruptive, is to start cataloging what you ate on headache days. This can be as simple as keeping a running list in your phone's notetaking app. Over several weeks, you may begin to see certain foods making frequent appearances in your entries. The second option is to start cutting specific food categories out of your diet for a few weeks at a time and see if your headaches/migraines go away (or at least become less frequent).

The recommendation is to start by keeping a list and then confirm or eliminate any suspicious foods by cutting them out for a while. Hopefully, this will reduce the amount of trial and error it takes to find your sensitivities, if you have any. Like most aspects of managing chronic pain, this could be a journey that takes several weeks or even months to see progress. Your first few guesses could likely be duds, so don't get discouraged; worthwhile changes take time.

Joint Pain and Damage

If you suffer from chronic joint pain from your time in service or an athletic injury, the most common cause is inflammation. This is your body's natural response to a joint or tissue injury. Essentially, it's the blood vessels dilating to let more red and white blood cells into the damaged area, supplying it with nutrients that aid in natural healing and prevent infection. Unfortunately, for injuries the body isn't adequately equipped to heal, this inflammation will keep happening or begin to swell, resulting in chronic discomfort, pain, and possibly even further damage that will lead to inevitable surgery.

So how can you treat this problem with food?

Frequent, painful inflammation is often caused by your body overcompensating for a lack of nutrients. Since not enough resources are coming through your blood vessels to heal the injury, it stays or becomes more inflamed to fix the supply problem. By filling your diet with foods rich in Omega-3's, antioxidants, and Vitamins C and B, you can promote better tissue health and even naturally reduce pain and swelling. Over time, this may prevent further damage that could end with a joint replacement.

What Can I Eat to Help Reduce Inflammation?

- Fish rich in Omega 3's, like Salmon, Tuna, and Halibut
- Fruits like Apples, blueberries, and strawberries
- vegetables like onions and red peppers
- Anti-Inflammatories like olive oil, ginger, and green tea

How to Make a Successful Change

For most people, attaining these health benefits is going to require some changes in diet. You may be feeling a little Too Depressed to Work Out? The Gym May Be the Best Medicine.

Physical activity of any kind has been shown to help treat the symptoms of depression. The only challenge? Many people suffering from depression find that depression symptoms keep them from sticking to a fitness routine, creating a catch-22 that keeps them mired in negative emotion and away from the squat rack.

That could change if mental health providers start prescribing exercise the same way they'd prescribe any other medicine, according to a new study from Michigan State University. .

Researchers asked 295 patients receiving treatment at a mental health clinic about the effects exercise has on their emotions. The results were unequivocal: More than 80% of the patients felt that exercise often helped reduce anxiety and improved their mood.

Nearly half of the patients said they'd be interested in having a one-time discussion with their therapist about exercise, and many said they'd want ongoing advice about it. Overall, 85% said they'd like to exercise more. Despite that, more than half of them cited their moods as a reason they don't get more exercise.

"Physical activity has been shown to be effective in alleviating mild to moderate depression and anxiety," lead author Carol Janney said, according to the MSU press release. "Current physical activity guidelines advise at least 30 minutes, five days a week to promote mental and physical health, yet many of those surveyed weren't meeting these recommendations."

Mental health providers may not have the expertise to prescribe actual exercise programs, but partnering with trainers or exercise facilities could be an effective approach for mental health providers to support their patients' desire to work out more, said senior author and professor emeritus in psychiatry Marcia Valenstein. More than half of the patients surveyed in the study expressed interest in getting help from a trainer and said that physical activity was something that their doctors rarely discussed.

"This is a missed opportunity," Valenstein said. "If we can make it easier for both therapists and their patients to have easier access to physical activity services, then we are likely to help more patients reduce their depression and anxiety."

If you suffer from depression and have days where the last thing you want to do is work out, get motivated. —to talk to your doctor about it. Remember: Those are the days when you could probably use a good sweat session the most. ♦

U.S. CONSTITUTION

by DR. BRENDA MACMENAMIN, DCE
Professor, Christian Leadership University

Make Your Declaration of Independence!

I've given the following quiz to hundreds of people. What do you think:

1. Who are the governing authorities in America?
2. What is the Supreme Law of the land?
3. What are the first three words of the Constitution?

87% of people that I poll say that one of the branches of government is the "governing authority." But actually in America, it is "We the People" which is also the answer to the third question.

If you were not able to answer these questions, do not feel bad. We have been propagandized for generations now, not just since the '60's. We lost our Biblical Worldview method of being taught in the early 1800's through Horace Mann and other humanists. They began to organize education through the government instead of leaving this God-given responsibility with the parents. Then our history began to be rewritten in the early 1900's by Charles and Mary Beard who wrote "An Economic Interpretation of the Constitution of the United States" which is a socialist depiction of our history. They began to take over our nation using our schools and our children. This is called Socialism by evolution instead of by revolution. So we don't get the blood baths of Europe, but we have been "socialized."

How do we get our nation back? One way is to know the original intent of the Constitution. I can help you do this in six weeks. You need to know how many articles are in the Constitution. What are they? Which one is longest and why? Why are the first three especially unique? What did the founders really think about slavery? What was the intent of the 3/5 clause, really? What was the original intent of the General Welfare and the commerce clauses? Why did they not allow "emit bills of credit" to appear in the Constitution? What did "a more perfect union" really mean? Is "Separation of Church and State" in the Constitution?

Would you like to join other God-fearing, Constitution-loving Americans for "Constitutional Conversations in Six Weeks"? Yes, in six weeks you can understand the Constitution and articulate its principles to others.

As Thomas Jefferson said, "I know no safe depository of the ultimate powers of the society but the people themselves; and if we think them not enlightened enough to exercise their control with a wholesome discretion, the remedy is not to take it from them, but to inform their discretion by education. This is the true corrective of abuses of constitutional power." ♦

7. Have your child meet you at the park after work each day for a few rounds of basketball.
8. Get a pass to the local public swimming pool. Encourage your children to head up to the pool by mid-morning to avoid the heat and the crowds.

More Ideas

9. Have your child write a story over the summer months.
10. Host a sprinkler party with the neighborhood kids.
11. Work with a neighborhood organization or nursing home to do service work together as a family. Community service is a great way to keep your child active while also learning valuable lessons in philanthropy and humility.
12. Encourage your teens to get a part-time summer job or volunteer at the library, rec center or church. They will learn time management and financial responsibility.
13. Do a home improvement project together. You and your kids can paint a bedroom wall, repurpose old furniture or plant a garden.
14. Take a cooking class together. Some are designed for children as young as 10.
15. Tour the area museums. Forbes.com featured the top 12 best children's museums in the U.S. Plan a day trip (or longer) to some of them this summer. Most museums offer a free admission time, such as Wednesday nights or the first Friday of every month.

The best thing you can do for your kids this summer is spend time with them. The bonding, activities and relaxation will be good for them, and for you. ♦ overwhelmed by all the different foods mentioned here. If you're struggling with where to start, don't feel like you have to throw out everything in your fridge and start over! Most fad diets and restrictive eating styles don't work because they ask you to make sudden, dramatic changes to your diet that are frustrating and impractical.

Instead, think about what kind of health improvements are most important to you and start looking for small steps you could take towards a slow but achievable change. For example, if you find yourself cooking with a lot of butter, think about recipes where you could swap some of it out for olive oil. While this may seem like an insignificant change, it's easy to stick with because it's simple. Over time, you can keep making more of these small changes until they add up to a big difference in how you feel. ♦

DAKOTA MARCHIANO

Owner of Tin Fish
Okeechobee, Florida

Hi Dakota, please you give us a short introduction.

Originally, I am from South Jersey, which is where most my family is located. I have been the sole owner and operator of this restaurant since 2018. I would say that I'm a work-aholic, but it's what I love. I am a faithful member of Christ Fellowship, I do my absolute best to let my love for Christ radiate through myself and my business.

What brought you to Okeechobee and when did you move here?

For years, we would travel the US in our RV, only occasionally staying at our home in NJ. I home schooled my daughter for those years so we could freely travel wherever we wanted and she could experience everything with us. We would normally find ourselves in Key West quite a few months out of the year, every year. Obviously, we were enjoying the weather much more in Florida than up north!

Our friends asked us to join them helping a veteran in Okeechobee, once we got here, I fell in love with the small town, everyone was so friendly. When we decided it was time to settle in one place, we went back to NJ for a few months and just knew it was time to move. So, in 2007, my husband pulled out a map of Florida and said “pick wherever you want to go” and all I could think about was that little town we went to, I thought it would be a great place for our family, especially my daughter who was more than ready to go back to school.

Please tell us about your family.

Not too much of my family came here, just my husband Bob and my daughter Tori.

Bob helps me where he can, being so busy he helps with some errands, arranges pool leagues for the bar, and little odds and ends that he notices. Tori is such a tremendous help to me! She’s my manager for the restaurant and bar, handling the “front of the house” staff, all the behind-the-scenes work, and anything I need, she’s always available to help or jump in if need be.

When she started as an LDRP RN, she retired from bartending/serving to strictly manager. Not only does she have two full-time jobs that she rocks at the age of 24, but she’s also an amazing single mother of two of my grandchildren, Arali, 6, and Noah, 4. Who doesn’t want to brag on their child, but I just couldn’t be prouder of and more thankful for her.

Once or twice a week, I take the night off and watch the kids for her since she works night shift, it’s one of my favorite downtimes to just hang out with them, family time is essential with all the work I put in at the restaurant.

I have a 34 years old son that not many people have met, he lives in NJ with his wife and their twins 6-year-old boys, Zach and Zeph.

Before my mothers passing in 2017, we moved her here with us to take care of her, she is 100% my reason for making sure I put my all into everything I do.

How did you get into the restaurant business?

When I was 17, I started my first job in a kitchen where I started with just making sandwiches, then worked my way up to be a cook, which I ended up falling in love with and did it for a little over 7 years. I decided that I was ready for a change of pace, so I went to college to become a paralegal. After working in the profession, I found it wasn’t a fit for me. So, I got a job as a secretary for approximately 200 people, at a computer corporation. Design Airways is a company that created the routes for airlines. Once I got married to my husband, he made it possible for me to be a stay at home mom in 2000. In 2014 when my daughter was graduating high school, I wanted to get a job. The first place I stopped at was Tin Fish and I was hired on the spot Feb. 22nd, 2014. It was a struggle at first to get back in the groove of things, but I became kitchen manager shortly after. I was working 60 hours a week easily, I absolutely loved it. In 2015, the former owner Joseph said he was closing the restaurant, and as funny as it sounds, all I could think about was the two new cooks I just hired that left their jobs to work with us. I couldn’t let us close, people would lose their jobs! So immediately, my mother loaned me the money used to buy the restaurant, 10/10 best decision I could have made.

What do you love about what you do?

The people in Okeechobee have always showed me a great deal of kindness and support for my business. I get to do what I love in the kitchen, working with my daughter by my side, and building a strong work family with my team of employees! I never act like I’m above anyone, I work just as hard as them on any given day. We always give everyone the benefit of the doubt, although I have been let down many times for that mind-set, I am determined to hold onto that. I love to teach people, it can be challenging, to say the least, especially with people that lack experience, but I know that it will pay off. Cooking is like a work of art, it makes me excited to share that. Even if people choose a different path, I know I was a part of their growth and they’ll have a great tool and experience under their belt that’ll spice up any resume. I take pride in my work, you have to take the good with the bad.

What is your philosophy on business and life?

Offering quality food, and great service that radiates from my employees, it is my formula that I will recommend anyone in business. Always be grateful to the community, they’re what keeps us going.

Everyone in Okeechobee and the visitors are absolutely appreciated and welcomed with open arms in our doors any day.

WHAT IS PHILOPHOBIA?

Philophobia is a fear of falling in love. It can also be a fear of getting into a relationship or fear that you will not be able to maintain a relationship. Many people experience a minor fear of falling in love at some point in their lives. But in extreme cases, philophobia can make people feel isolated and unloved.

Philophobia is not a condition that a doctor can diagnose because it is not in the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM). That is the guide that mental health professionals use to determine if someone has the criteria for a specific mental illness or mental health disorder. Even so, mental health professionals can often help with philophobia if it is affecting your life negatively.

Causes of Philophobia

The fear of falling in love has many potential causes, including:

Past experiences. Traumatic past relationships may contribute to the development of the fear of falling in love. Infidelity, betrayal, or heartbreak can cause you to stay away from romantic relationships. Other types of relationships can also give someone this fear, like parental relationships and close friendships.

Cultural experiences. In some cultures, there's more pressure to marry at a young age under specific circumstances. If someone does not want to have this traditional experience, it can lead to philophobia.

Fear of rejection. Putting yourself out there can be scary. Studies show that rejection can have similar results in the body to physical pain. Most people are able to get over rejection, but if you have experienced several painful rejections, the fear of another one can stay with you.

Symptoms of Philophobia

The symptoms of this fear are different for each person. However, many people with philophobia experience:

- Lack of intimate relationships
- Always feeling anxious in relationships

In relationship situations or when thinking about relationships, you may also have:

- Rapid heart rate
- Shallow breathing
- Panic or anxiety attacks which may include chest pains

Risks of Philophobia

People who have lingering or more extreme cases of philophobia may have an increased risk of:

- Depression
- Anxiety
- Substance abuse
- Suicidal ideation

Treatments for Philophobia

Most people experience some fear or resistance to intimacy or falling in love at some point in their lives. However, it can become a problem if your philophobia is causing you significant distress. If that's the case for you, treatment is available.

The main treatment suggested for philophobia is to seek therapy or counseling. You can work with a mental health professional. They may go over your past relationships to identify what is causing your fear of falling in love. They may give you relaxation exercises or other types of therapeutic homework to help you feel more comfortable with dating and relationships.

Therapists may use cognitive behavioral therapy (CBT) to help you notice the thought patterns and habits that contribute to your fear of being in a relationship.

They may also use systematic desensitization therapy, also called counterconditioning. This is when the therapist slowly

8 Things Your Pee Will Tell You

By K. GROSSMAN

1. Your Level of Hydration

Normal, healthy urine should be a pale, yellow color without odor. If you notice your pee is dark or amber-colored, you may not be drinking enough water. Stay hydrated by keeping a water bottle with you to sip from throughout the day. Be sure to drink before, during, and after strenuous exercise. If you don't like drinking plain water, try adding a spritz of lemon. Sometimes thirst masquerades as hunger. Try sipping water instead of heading straight to the fridge between meals. Replacing sugary sodas with ice water keeps your body refreshed.

2. Whether You Have Eaten Unusual Vegetables

Asparagus is a vegetable that may cause your urine to have a strong odor. While the acids in asparagus seem to alter the urine odor of all of those who consume it, not everyone is able to detect this aroma. Beets, while not changing the smell of urine, can change its color to pink or light red. Fava beans and rhubarb may also temporarily darken urine. Carrots can cause your pee to turn an orange color. If your colorful pee is caused by vegetables, there is no cause for alarm.

3. If You Have a Urinary Tract Infection

If you notice your urine has turned cloudy, you may want to contact your doctor. Urinary tract infections trigger your body to produce more white blood cells to fight the infection. These white blood cells can spill over into your urine, leaving it cloudy. Other signs of a urinary tract infection are a persistent need to urinate, frequent desire to urinate, and painful burning while urinating. If you are making more trips to the restroom and feel like you aren't able to completely empty your bladder, a UTI may be the problem.

4. If You Have Diabetes

Sweet, fruity-smelling urine can be an indication of diabetes. Diabetes occurs when your pancreas is unable to produce enough

THE 6 HABITS OF HAPPILY MARRIED COUPLES

Marriage consists of give and take. It takes compromises, patience, understanding, and love. We are so accustomed to give up, and give in, when things don't run smoothly. Marriage is never easy, but there are people out there who make it work. In an article by NY Daily News, a study on lasting marriages found that, "...happier marriages tended to inspire healthier habits and better coping mechanisms, such as encouraging each other to seek medical attention when needed, sleeping better, drinking less, and supporting each other after a stressful day."

1. THEY HAVE THEIR OWN INTERESTS AND HOBBIES.

You are married, but not attached at the hips. Happy couples have their own way of creating enjoyment through separate interests, hobbies and entertainment. They can make models, go fishing, paint, write, go hiking, and other forms of events without their partners. They each have time to be alone and cherish what fulfills and brings them joy. Whenever they share together, they don't feel as if they lost a part of themselves because they are committed to keeping their individualism intact.

2. THEY ARE EACH OTHER'S SUPPORT GROUP.

Friedrich Nietzsche said, "It is not a lack of love, but a lack of friendship that makes unhappy marriages." Marriages that are based on deep friendship stand the test of time. Finances, illnesses, and other challenges are tackled together rather than apart. Teacher and author, John Dufresne says, "You can always tell a happy marriage. People in love begin to acquire each other's traits, each other's styles- they begin to look and act alike. They want to please. They admire each other and, naturally enough, want to become what they esteem and cherish." But, it's not just the support that they give each other. Happily married couples truly enjoy reaching goals together. They plan things out and discuss without putting the other person down. They might not always agree, but happy couples truly find a way of reaching a middle ground for support and commitment.

3. THEY GIVE EACH OTHER PLEASURE.

Sex is not the only thing that brings pleasure to these couples. Happily married couples give their time to each other. They send daily texts, make special moments count for no reason at all, and let their partner know that they matter. They bring home sweet desserts or flowers or tickets to a concert. There is an admiration of sorts that increases with each passing year. They do things for one another just because the person doesn't enjoy doing it: pumping gas in the wife's car, taking out the trash, doing his laundry, bathing the dog, etc. It's in the smallest of details that they thrive and connect with a deep sense of appreciation.

4. THEY PUT EACH OTHER FIRST.

Even when having children, happily married couples put each other first. And, together they raise a family. At the end of the day, it is their union that makes it through all the challenges in their lives. Work and other forms of daily stress can take a toll on relationships, but these couples make time to cuddle, share, and release the stress. They are not afraid of showing up and being vulnerable with each other. It's important to take time to acknowledge each other. Happy people make each other happy because they know not to sweat the small stuff.

5. THEY HAVE A SEPARATE GROUP OF FRIENDS.

It's healthy to keep your own friendships that aren't involved in your marriage. Happy married couples have separate gatherings with friends, they travel separately, and go to events without the other. There is no jealousy or insecurities because they know that at the end of the day they come home to their best friend. It's important to have your alone time as well as time with people who share similar interests. The long lasting relationships are based on trust and mutual understanding that you are not alone in this life to just cater to one another. These couples go out and have fun with others and do not feel guilty about it. It's very healthy to continue doing the things that enrich you with others because you get to come home and share with your loved one.

6. THEY DON'T SACRIFICE THEIR RELATIONSHIP.

Divorce is not an option they take lightly. This is for better and for worse. Happy married couples do not make decisions apart. They make them together. There is no one size fits all in a relationship. Marriage can be a roller coaster of a ride but when you know you have committed to your soul mate you make that a priority. The work these folks put in stops being "work" because it is a companionship. It's a matter of trust, respect and ultimately love and acknowledgment that makes a happy long lasting marriage. As author, Elizabeth Gilbert says, "To be fully seen by somebody, then, and be loved anyhow – this is a human offering that can border on miraculous." ♦ insulin to handle the glucose in your bloodstream. It can also occur if your body is unable to respond properly to the effects of insulin. In these cases, excess blood sugar can spill over into your urine, causing a sickly sweet smell. Some diabetic patients have increased amounts of ketones in their urine. Ketones can give off a smell similar to acetone, or nail polish remover.

5. If You Have Taken Certain Medications

Just like the foods you eat, the medications you take can show up in your urine. The antidepressant drug amitriptyline can turn your pee blue, as can the pain medication indomethacin. The anti-inflammatory drug sulfasalazine can turn your urine orange. Certain antimalarial drugs can turn your pee brown, as can laxatives that contain cascara or senna.

6. Whether You Have Kidney Disease

The National Kidney Foundation warns that foamy or fizzy urine may indicate too much protein in your urine. If you notice your pee has become bubbly or foamy, you may want to contact your physician to determine if your kidneys are functioning properly. Other signs of kidney disease are nausea and vomiting, fatigue, mental fogginess, and weakness. If kidney disease progresses, you may have swollen ankles, chest pain from a buildup of fluid around the heart, and shortness of breath.

7. Whether Or Not You Are Pregnant

While you can't tell by looking at it or sniffing it, your pee can tell you if you are pregnant. Home pregnancy tests detect the level of human chorionic gonadotropin (hCG) in the urine. These tests can be used as early as one week after a missed period, and when used properly are about 99% accurate.

8. If You Have an Enlarged Prostate Gland

As men get older, they may suffer a condition called benign prostatic hyperplasia (BPH). The National Association for Continence reports that 50% of males over the age of 60 suffer from BPH. Those over the age of 85 have a 90% chance of experiencing an enlarged prostate. BPH occurs as the prostate gland becomes enlarged. Since the prostate gland is located in close proximity to the bladder, as it becomes larger it can block the flow of urine. Some of the early signs of BPH are a frequent need to urinate, increased need to urinate at nighttime, weak flow of urine, and difficulty completely emptying the bladder. ♦

10 Common Ways Seniors Get Scammed

Here's what to watch for to make sure you don't fall prey to some of the biggest rip-offs targeting seniors.

It's a sad fact that scammers often target the people with the most to lose, and the least chance to catch on or fix things.

Seniors may have strong credit and a large nest egg for scam artists to go after. They also may be more trusting or less likely to report scams if they fear friends and family will think they can't manage their own affairs anymore.

Here are some major, ongoing scams to watch out for.

1. Counterfeit drug scams

Seniors often turn to the internet to find drugs that are more affordable, especially with specialized medications. As a result, they can be scammed online.

Fake drugs masquerading as legitimate medicines may worsen your health conditions, the FBI warns.

These drugs may look real but may be contaminated, expired or otherwise unsafe, the FDA says.

For legitimate deals online, seek pharmacies that require a valid prescription from a doctor or another licensed health care professional, are licensed by your state pharmacy board and have a U.S. state-licensed pharmacist available to answer questions, the FDA says.

2. Telemarketing scams

You don't have to be a senior to fall prey to a voice on the phone urging you to "act now or miss out on a great deal." Still, many seniors do become victims.

If you hear a caller say these things or make similar claims, the FBI says to just say, "No, thank you," and hang up:

- You've won a "free" gift, vacation or prize but must pay "postage and handling" or other charges.
- You must send money, give a credit card or bank account number, or have a check picked up by courier before you can review the offer carefully.
- The caller resists providing references or letting you review the offer with your family, lawyer, accountant, the Better Business Bureau or a consumer protection agency.

3. Anti-aging product scams

Some scams take advantage of seniors who may feel the need to conceal their age at work and in social circles.

Counterfeit "anti-aging" products may contain arsenic, beryllium and cadmium — all known carcinogens — along with high levels of aluminum and dangerous levels of bacteria, the FBI warns. Products may cause eye infections, acne, rashes and psoriasis.

Ask lots of questions about any offer of products, the FBI advises. Be dubious of "secret formulas," "breakthroughs," celebrity endorsements or claims that an item can purportedly cure a wide variety of unrelated conditions.

4. Funeral and cemetery scams

Seniors may encounter scammers even at funeral homes and memorial services.

Some crooks read obituaries to find and approach grieving widows or widowers at funeral services. Claiming the deceased owes them money, scammers try to extort money to settle the fake debts.

Also, disreputable funeral homes may rely on seniors'

The Good, Bad and Ugly of Short-Term Care Plans

Americans would like nothing more than to live in their own homes in their old age. Can short-term care insurance help them do it?

The plans have a good, bad and ugly side worthy of a Clint Eastwood movie and require a squinty-eyed analysis to gauge their value.

On the plus side, “short-term care plans fill the need for those who want some protection, but are too old, too unhealthy or cannot afford long-term care insurance,” says Jesse Slome, director of the American Association for Long-Term Care Insurance. The downside is short-term policies only cover care for one year or less, limiting how much they pay out per day or week.

Although the policies are more affordable than long-term care insurance, you also get less for your money. For example, a short-term care policy in Illinois covering $1,050 of home care a week for up to 52 weeks would cost a 65-year-old woman $63 a month, according to AALTCI. If that same policy also covers nursing homes, the cost is $125 per month, but that care is considered a separate benefit that pays only up to $200 per day for 365 days after a 100-day waiting period.

By comparison, a long-term care policy would cost that same applicant $175 a month if she is in good health or $258 a month if she has some health conditions and pay for roughly three years of care at home or 18 months in a facility, after a similar waiting period.

Pros and cons of short-term care insurance

The good

Americans would like nothing more than to live in their own homes in their old age. Can short-term care insurance help them do it?

Short-term care plans do have one big benefit: “People will have an easier time getting insured,” says Slome. The policies accept applicants at much older ages than long-term care insurance, potentially up to age 89, and have simpler medical underwriting.

The bad

Those advantages aren’t enough to convince Skip Skolnik, founder of Skolnik Retirement Solutions in Elyria, Ohio, that the policies are worth getting when the median annual cost of a private room in a nursing home is a little over $100,000 and a home health aide is more than half that amount. “It’s like trying to cover a gaping wound with a Band-Aid,” he says.

People with more limited assets typically qualify for Medicaid and don’t need extra private insurance, he adds. Even Medicare will cover short-term care at home and in a facility in some situations. As a result, you may already have a chunk of this short-term need covered.

The ugly

Short-term care policies aren’t easy to find. A number of states, including California, Florida, Massachusetts and New York, ban the policies from their insurance markets in part because the benefits are considered too skimpy. Even if you live in a state where short-term care plans are sold, most insurers don’t want to deal with them. Only some insurers – Aetna, Medico and Standard Life, for example – offer short-term care policies, says Slome; his association’s website (aaltci.org/stc) can refer you to others.

In addition, he says, “there are very few agents versed in these policies.” ♦ unfamiliarity with the cost of funeral services, adding charges to the bill and insisting on an expensive casket, even for a direct cremation that can be done with an inexpensive cardboard casket.

Since consumer protections vary from state to state, the FBI warns, unscrupulous operators sometimes try getting away with overcharging for expenses and even listing themselves as financial beneficiaries.

Take along a trusted friend when visiting a funeral home. Make sure you understand what basic fees cover and which services are additional. Shop around. Don't feel pressured to buy, sign a contract or make a commitment.

5. Real estate scams

Scammers like to target elderly homeowners. Reverse mortgage borrowers are a favorite target of scammers. Con artists hawking home repair and remodeling or fraudulent investments urge seniors to apply for reverse mortgages in order to pay for the products and services they are selling.

The FBI adds that scammers also may urge homeowners to obtain a reverse mortgage to buy a lower-cost home that is, in fact, a distressed property.

You may encounter thieves in real estate, financial services or other financial companies. Hoping to get their hands on seniors' home equity, they "help" homeowners obtain an HECM (Home Equity Conversion Mortgage), diverting some or all of the money to themselves. The FBI cautions to watch out for offers of free homes, home flips, help with refinancing, investments, foreclosure or refinancing "opportunities." These scammers prey on seniors at church, in "investment seminars" and on TV, radio, billboards and mailers particularly.

6. Social Security scams

In one recent year — 2018 — some 35,000 people reported losing a total of $10 million to Social Security phone scams, according to the Federal Trade Commission (FTC). And remember, those are just the people who realized they had been defrauded and reported it to the federal government.

A typical Social Security scam goes like this:

- You get a phone call that appears to be from the real phone number for the Social Security Administration (1-800-772-1213).
- A voice tells you that your Social Security number has been suspended because of suspicious or criminal activity.
- The voice asks you to confirm your Social Security number.
- The caller warns that your bank account will be seized and suggests you move money onto gift cards and then share the numbers and PINs for those.

The call is not really from the SSA. Someone just made it appear as if the call were coming from the agency's number — a practice known as "spoofing."

The caller probably won't know your Social Security number until you tell them. Your bank account isn't going to be seized, and your money is safer in the bank than on gift cards, in cash or wired to anywhere else.

Know this: The Social Security Administration does not make calls to threaten taking your benefits or to suggest you move money.

Never give your Social Security number, bank information or credit card number to anyone who contacts you unexpectedly.

If you have doubts, go to SSA.gov. Click on "Contact Us" (bottom of the page), and contact the agency yourself.

To report any scam, contact the FTC's Complaint Assistant website.

7. Medicare card scams

Not so long ago, the federal government replaced old Medicare cards and Medicare identification numbers. The new ones do not reflect seniors' Social Security numbers, as we reported in "What You Must Know About the New Medicare Card You Will Get Soon."

The change was made to thwart scammers. Ironically, though, it gave scammers a new opportunity.

In this scam, a purported "Medicare representative" calls to get you to "verify" your Medicare number — new or old — and to send you a new card, for a fee.

Unfortunately, both old and new Medicare numbers can be used for identity theft.

If you don't recognize a caller's number, don't pick up. If you are suspicious of a caller, just hang up.

Don't reveal your Medicare number to a caller. The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, which administers the program, won't call you unsolicited, points out the Better Business Bureau. If the agency needs to contact you, it will send a letter. And the new Medicare cards are free.

8. Vacation rental scams

This scam is another one the FTC has been warning about in recent years: imitation vacation rental listings.

Scammers might steal actual listings and simply change the contact information, assuming the identity of the real lister. Or they might invent property listings of their own, then advertise unbelievably low rates and try to convince travelers they've found a hidden deal.

Be suspicious of listings well below the going rate, and always look up the address on a map — preferably a map with a street view of the property that you can compare with any listing photos.

Don't let anyone rush you into paying, or convince you to use a payment method with inadequate protections, such as a gift card or wire transfer. And stick to well-known, reputable vacation rental websites like Homestay and VRBO.

9. Computer security scams

While anybody can fall victim to this type of scam, the FTC has warned of organized tech support scams targeting seniors in recent years.

A typical scenario involves a telemarketing call from someone claiming to be from an established technology company — usually a household name, even if they're not necessarily known for computer security specifically.

The caller will warn that hackers are likely to break into your computer and rob your bank account, and the caller offers a victim the sale and installation of security software.

Once a victim agrees, the caller will give instructions that allow the scammer to remotely connect to the victim's computer, supposedly to install that security software. But while the scammer is doing that, they help themselves to personal information.

They may even create new “security threats” on your computer so they can call back later and offer to “fix” them for an additional fee.

The advice here is to ignore unsolicited offers to help beef up your computer security, especially if they involve letting someone remotely access your computer.

If you aren't confident that your computer is safe, find a reputable service company where you can get face-to-face assistance and ask questions about what software you should install and safety procedures you should follow.

10. Grandparent scams

The FTC reported a “striking increase” in the typical amount of money lost to this type of scam in 2018. People age 70 or older who were conned into sending cash reported losing an average of $9,000 per person.

This type of scam usually starts with a phone call from someone pretending to be a grandchild of the victim who is in need of cash due to legal trouble.

The caller might offer an embarrassing sob story about being caught drinking while driving — literally sobbing, to draw attention away from the unrecognized voice of a stranger.

Then the caller pleads for help and asks the victim not to tell anyone, and to send cash in a particular way.

The scammer might cull information about the victim's actual grandkids from social media, or wait for the confused victim to give a clue as to whom they should be impersonating.

So, one of the best strategies here is to carefully guard your privacy, leaving it to callers to identify themselves. Don't say things like, “Is that you, Joey?”

Limit access to your social media profiles to actual friends and family, and don't accept unexpected friend requests. That includes ones from people you know, because scammers often impersonate others' names and photos to gain access to your social media profiles. Verify that an actual friend or relative sent the request, such as by calling the person to confirm.

If you get a call and are uncertain about the caller's authenticity, you can simply offer to “see what you can do” and end the call. Then, try to contact the alleged victim directly to see if it was a legitimate call. ♦ fireworks cont.

- Never try to make your own fireworks.
 - Always use fireworks outside and have a bucket of water and a hose nearby in case of accidents.
 - Steer clear of others setting off fireworks. They can backfire or shoot off in the wrong direction.
 - Never throw or point fireworks at someone, even as a joke.
 - Don't hold fireworks in your hand or have any part of your body over them while lighting. Wear eye protection, and don't carry fireworks in your pocket — the friction could set them off.
 - Point fireworks away from homes, and keep away from brush, leaves, and flammable substances. The National Fire Protection Association estimates that local fire departments respond to more than 50,000 fires caused yearly by fireworks.
 - Light one firework at a time (not in glass or metal containers), and never relight a dud.
 - Don't allow kids to pick up pieces of fireworks after an event. Some may still be ignited and can explode at any time.
 - Soak all fireworks in a bucket of water before throwing them in the trash can.
 - Think about your pet. Animals have sensitive ears and can be frightened or stressed by the Fourth of July and other big celebrations. Keep pets indoors to reduce the risk of running loose or getting injured.
- If an Injury Happens
If a child is injured by fireworks, immediately go to a doctor or hospital.
- If an eye injury happens:
- Don't let your child touch or rub it, as this may cause even more damage.
 - Don't flush the eye with water or try to put any ointment on it.
 - Cut out the bottom of a paper cup, place it around the eye, and get medical care immediately — your child's eyesight may depend on it.
- If your child is burned:
- Remove clothing from the burned area.
 - Call your doctor immediately.

Fireworks are meant to be enjoyed, but you'll enjoy them much more knowing your family is safe.

Home Improvement Projects DIYers Regret the Most

Binge-watching HGTV home improvement shows can make it look so easy—even enjoyable—to do anything from retiling a bathroom to repainting the living room. Heck, it even seems like it might make financial sense to forgo the pricy professionals altogether. What could go wrong?

Those famous last words have led nearly two-thirds of do-it-yourselfers to regret not calling an expert on at least one home improvement project, according to a recent survey from ImproveNet. The online home services marketplace surveyed 2,000 Americans in May who had attempted at least one DIY renovation project.

The average DIY enthusiast attempted eight projects, according to the survey. And about a third of them had to later hire a professional to redo the job—which can cost more than if they'd hired a professional from the start.

"People should educate themselves about what they're getting into and what the common pitfalls are," says Andy Kerns, creative director at Digital Third Coast, which teamed up with ImproveNet to do the survey. "It's natural for people to expect things to go smoothly, especially if they're not experienced contractors. [But] rather than just jumping in, people should find out what's happened when things didn't go well for others."

Folks with no experience can start with a simple, low-stakes project, and go from there, says Joanne Theunissen, the remodeling chair of the National Association of Home Builders.

"We have seen people take on a lot more than they could deal with," says Theunissen, also the co-owner of Howling Hammer Builders, a Mount Pleasant, MI-based remodeler and custom builder. "Be cautious. If it looks easy on TV, understand it's not [in real life]."

Which projects did folks regret doing themselves the most?

If you don't have experience installing floor tiles, you may want to start slow, rather than in the master bath: That was ranked the most regretted home improvement project by survey participants.

"It's so difficult, and there are so many steps to getting it right," says Theunissen. "If you think you want to try, buy an old table and see if you can put ceramic tile on the top, getting it level and grouted correctly. And if doesn't work, throw it away. You're not out much."

The rest of the top 10 most regretted DIY home improvement projects were replacing a ceiling; refinishing hardwood floors; installing carpets; finishing basements; installing hardwood floors; refinishing cabinetry; installing sprinklers; installing showers and baths; and painting home interiors.

Why were these DIY projects so regrettable?

The majority of DIYers, 55%, said their projects took longer to complete than they expected. The ones that ran over more than anticipated the most were repairing home foundations, installing outdoor patios and walkways, and painting the exteriors of their homes.

Meanwhile, about 50% of do-it-yourselfers said their improvements were physically more difficult than anticipated, particularly when it came to installing roofs, landscaping, or installing patios and walkways. And 48% said their endeavors were technically harder than they had counted on, and 17% said they cost more than they had assumed.

Some projects even caused harm to their homes—and themselves. About 8% said their places were damaged as a result of the undertakings, mostly with repairing foundations, replacing ceilings, and installing roofs. And 6% were injured in the process. So be careful with installing fireplaces and windows and repairing foundations!

"A lot of people do very nice work, but you have to be really aware of what your skills are," says Theunissen.

So what was the top reason folks were disappointed in the fruits of their blood, sweat, and now tears? About 55% of respondents said the finished project simply didn't look as good as they had hoped. These folks were the most dissatisfied with their interior paint jobs, floor tile installations, and hardwood floor installations. ♦

With Risks of a Recession Rising, Take These Steps Before One Hits

Soaring inflation and higher interest rates have some experts and companies warning of an imminent recession. Despite the current bad feelings about the economy, there's little consensus about when a recession will come or what effects it will have. Morgan Housel, author of The Psychology of Money, may have said it best when he tweeted in April: "We're definitely heading toward a recession. The only thing that's uncertain is the timing, location, duration, magnitude, and policy response."

The point he's making is that there's always a recession on the horizon -- economies are cyclical, with upswings and downturns. We just can't tell exactly what's happening while we're in the middle of it. We can only look back. Since the Great Depression, the US has had about a dozen economic setback periods lasting anywhere from a few months to over a year.

Attempting to figure out recession specifics is a guessing game -- and anyone who tells you different is likely trying to sell you something.

The best we can do right now is draw on history to build context, get more proactive about the money moves we can control and resist the urge to panic. This includes reviewing what happened in previous recessions and taking a closer look at our financial goals to see what levers to pull to stay on track.

Here are eight specific steps you can take to create more financial stability and resilience in a turbulent economy.

1. Plan more, panic less

The silver lining to current recession predictions is that

Sharon Jones

cannon-shooting-nikon.SmugMug.com e-mail: face.beautiful@yahoo.com

they're still only forecasts. There is time to assemble a plan without the real pressures and challenges that come with being in the thick of an economic slowdown. Over the next couple of months, review your financial plan and map out some worst-case scenarios when your adrenaline isn't running high.

Some questions to consider: If you did lose your job later this year or in early 2023, what would be your plan? How can you fortify your finances now to weather a layoff? (Keep reading for related advice.)

2. Bulk up your cash reserves

A key to navigating a recession relatively unscathed is having cash in the bank. The steep 10% unemployment rate during the Great Recession in 2009 taught us this. On average, it took 8 to 9 months for those affected to land on their feet. Those fortunate to have robust emergency accounts were able to continue paying their housing costs and buy time to figure out next steps with less stress.

Consider retooling your budget to allocate more into savings now to hit closer to the recommended six to nine month rainy day reserve. It may make sense to unplug from recurring subscriptions, but a better strategy that won't feel as depriving may be to call billers (from utility companies to cable to car insurance) and ask for discounts and promotions. Speak specifically with customer retention departments to see what offers they can extend to keep you from canceling your plans.

3. Seek a second income stream

Web searches for "side hustles" are always popular, but especially now, as many look to diversify income streams in the run up to a potential recession. Just like it helps to diversify investments, diversifying income streams can reduce the income volatility that arrives with job loss. For inspiration on easy, low-lift side hustles that you can do from home, check out my recent story.

4. Resist impulsive investing moves

It's hard not to be worried about your portfolio after all the recent red arrows in the stock market. If you have more than 10 or 15 years until retirement, history proves it's better to stick with the market ups and downs. According to Fidelity, those who stayed invested in target-date funds, which include mutual funds and ETFs commonly tied to a retirement date, during the 2008-09 financial crisis had higher account balances by 2011 than those who reduced or halted their contributions.

If you have yet to sign up for automatic rebalancing, definitely look into this with your portfolio manager or online broker. This feature can ensure that your instruments remain properly weighted and aligned with your risk tolerance and investment goals, even as the market swings.

5. Lock interest rates now

As the policy makers raise interest rates to bring down inflation levels, interest rates will increase. This potentially spells bad news for anyone with an adjustable rate loan. It's also a challenge for those carrying a balance on a credit card.

While federal student loan borrowers don't have to worry about their rates going up, those with private variable rate loans may want to look into consolidating or refinancing options through an existing lender or other banks like SoFi that could consolidate the debt into one fixed-rate loan. This will prevent your monthly payments from increasing unpredictably when the Federal Reserve raises interest rates again this year, as expected.

6. Protect your credit score

Borrowers may have a tougher time accessing credit in recessions, as interest rates jump and banks enforce stricter lending rules. To qualify for the best loan terms and rates, aim for a strong credit score in the 700s or higher. You can typically check your credit score for free through your existing bank or lender, and you can also receive free weekly credit reports from each of the three main credit bureaus through the end of the year from AnnualCreditReport.com.

To improve your credit score, work towards paying down high balances, review and dispute any errors that may be on your credit report or consider consolidating high-interest credit card debt into a lower interest debt consolidation loan or 0% introductory APR balance transfer card.

7. Press pause on buying a home

It's already a competitive housing market with few homes to go around. If rising mortgage rates are adding more pressure to your ability to buy a home within budget, consider renting for a little longer. If you're also worried about your job security in a potential recession, then that's even more reason to take pause. Leasing isn't cheap at the moment, but it can afford you more flexibility and mobility. Without the need to park cash for a down payment and closing costs, renting can also keep you more liquid during a potentially challenging economy.

8. Take care of your valuables

The advice that was born out of the sky-high inflation period in the late 1970s still applies now: "If it ain't broke, don't fix it."

With ongoing supply chain issues, many of us face high prices and delays in acquiring new cars, tech products, furniture, home materials and even contact lenses. This includes replacement parts, too. If a product comes with a free warranty, be sure to sign up. And if it's a nominal fee to extend the insurance, it may be worth it during a time when prices are on the rise.

For example, my car has been in the repair shop for over three months, waiting for parts to arrive from overseas. So, in addition to paying my monthly car payment, I have a rental car fee that's adding up. If nothing else, I'll be heading into a possible recession a more cautious driver. ♦

Brennan Eye Care has been serving Okeechobee for two generations. Dr. J Patrick Brennan and Dr. Christine Brennan Bishop are proud to be a family of eye doctors serving the families of our great community. Between them they have over 50 years of experience; as their motto states, that is "Quality Eye Care you can Trust!" Dr. Brennan starting practicing in Okeechobee in 1983 and his daughter Dr. Christine Bishop joined him in 2008. Brennan Eye Care has all the newest technology with a personalized small-town feel. They strive to have you feeling like family when you walk in the door and have you leaving with the most thorough and comprehensive eye exam.

Brennan Eye Care has the most fashionable off the runway eye wear, in addition to great frames for those on a budget. Their lenses are made with the newest technology available so you have the best and safest products to protect your eyes.

Brennan Eye Care offers state of the art equipment that helps with diagnosing eye diseases, neurological disorders and even equipment to help measure you for your eye wear. They have a screening test called the iWellness, which is an x-ray like picture of the most important parts of your eye, with no radiation. This test can find early signs of Diabetes, Macular Degeneration, Glaucoma and many more eye disorders, much sooner than a normal eye exam or picture. You will be glad to have Brennan Eye Care for all your eye care needs, and with two Doctors, they always have a Doctor available every weekday and are also able to see their patients for emergencies over the weekend, if needed.

Dr. Bishop is not only great at diagnosing and treating most eye disease, she is also adept at fitting her patients with contact lenses. Her expertise in the contact lens area is evident by all the astigmatism and multifocal fits she correctly performs weekly. If you are tired of wearing glasses for distance or reading, schedule an appointment today for your custom fit, and you will not be disappointed.

Dr. Pat Brennan has been serving our community and surrounding area for many decades and he has passed that passion of serving to his daughter. Dr. Christine Bishop is president of the Treasure Coast Optometric Society for the past 7 years, and which provides indigent eye care to our area. She was also appointed Secretary of the Health Council of South East Florida by our county commissioners to represent Okeechobee County. Dr. Bishop is also the Membership Chair for the Okeechobee Chamber of Commerce, and a Board Member of Okeechobee Education Foundation. Her favorite activities are spending time with her husband and three beautiful daughters, along with serving at More 2 Life Church in Okeechobee. ♦

exposes you to the idea of falling in love to desensitize you to your fear. They may give you real-world tasks as you get more comfortable with the idea of falling in love.

Hypnotherapy is not like the stage hypnosis shown in movies. It is more like a guided meditation that enables you to imagine yourself doing what you would like to do.

How to Find the Right Therapist to Work With

Finding the right therapist can be a process of trial and error. If you are ready to work with someone, start by researching different types of therapy so you'll understand how a particular therapist will approach working with you. Then, ask potential candidates about their specialties. You want someone that has experience and expertise in philophobia. Finally, make sure they have the proper licenses for your area.

If you don't feel comfortable with a particular therapist, try another. It's a good idea to trust your gut feeling about therapists. Following these tips, you can find someone who can work on your philophobia with you.

How to Work on Philophobia On Your Own

You can also do things on your own to help with your fear of falling in love. You can work on these exercises alone or with a therapist:

- Evaluate your relationship history to see if a past hurt is making you afraid of repeating the experience in a new relationship
- Identify negative voices in your head that prevent you from feeling happy in relationships
- Allow yourself to feel difficult emotions; that is how you can move through them
- Question or evaluate the preconceived notions you have about relationships
- Recognize where the defenses that prevent you from opening up to people come from

ACQUIRE HIS NATURE BY PRAYING OUT LOUD:

Lord, I do believe that Jesus of Nazareth took my place in the Cross. Lord, I am sorry for all my sins against you and against my own life, please forgive me. I believe Jesus was raised on the third day for my justification. Jesus, I receive you as my Lord and Savior. Your Holy blood cleanses me right now and God gives me a new heart and eternal life. Now my name is written in the book of life, guaranteed by the following written law:

"That if you confess with your mouth that Jesus is Lord and believe in your heart that God has raised Him from the dead, you will be saved. For with the heart one believes unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation" Romans 10:9-10

If you made this prayer, email me at: icarepublications@gmail.com. I would love to share your joy and send you material for balanced growth in the grace of the Lord. Also, send this letter to anyone you know as a testimony of your faith.
